

PROFESSOR ICEBREAKER BINGO

Created by Joe Bisz (joebisz.com)

- Greet a colleague with a statement.
- If the colleague says “Yes,” she signs her name in any bingo space containing that statement.
- If the colleague says “No,” try another statement--or another colleague!
- HOWEVER: You can only use the same colleague’s signature twice per board. Also, the same colleague cannot sign two spaces that contain the same greeting.
- “BINGO!”: A BINGO requires a “Straight” (4 signatures in a row, in any direction, including diagonally) or a “Flush” (4 signatures on spaces with the same image, anywhere on the board).
- WINNING THE GAME: If you are the first to finish 2 Boards, call out “I got 2 Bingos!”, and you win a prize! (Remember: only 1 Bingo per board.)

When you get a BINGO, the game does not end! Flip your board to the other side, and keep playing on your second board.

Board A

You enjoy your department’s listserv and think departmental life would be worse without it. 	You believe that grammar should be given significant weight in grading. 	You are deeply involved with an organization outside of your college that is related to your career. 	You believe that grammar should be given significant weight in grading.
You actively enjoy a physical sport, yoga, or another kind of exercise. 	You’ve thought about becoming department chair. 	You’ve thought about becoming department chair. 	You’ve changed significantly as a teacher since coming to your college.
One of your fields is pedagogy. 	You could easily spend 5+ hours obsessing over or preparing a recipe. 	You like to assign extraordinarily difficult texts. 	You believe an entrance/ exit exam at your college/ department should be replaced with one dramatically different, or nothing at all.
You are sometimes tempted to throw in the towel and begin acting/ editing/some artistic pursuit/ rock stardom. 	You still like playing with toys. 	You still like playing with toys. 	You are sometimes tempted to throw in the towel and begin acting/ editing/some artistic pursuit/ rock stardom.
